

The Great Charlie

Jauntily swinging his cane, wearing a seedy cutaway jacket, baggy trousers, huge out-turned boots, a dilapidated bowler-hat, and an absurd toothbrush moustache that's the Charlie Chaplin we all love. Coming from a life of poverty his father was rarely around and his mother struggled to support them financially after his mother was committed to a mental asylum Charlie began to perform. His first film appearance, in 1914, Making a Living, was where his comical abilities were picked up. In his second movie, he decided on the costume with which he would become identifiable for many years to come. This book, written after many discussions with Charlie himself, describes his personality as revealed in his chief films and tells much about his life his precarious London childhood, his early stage work, his screen comedies with Fred Karno and Mack Sennett, his triumphs in the later great films including Limelight. Payne also traces the development of the Clown from Ancient Greece through Pierrot and Punch, Grimaldi and Dan Leno, and shows how Charlie's genius for creating laughter follows that great tradition. A full-sized portrait of a genius, so far as I know the most thorough attempt to describe Chaplin's life and work. DAILY TELEGRAPH Mr Payne is steeped down to his pen in his protagonist's magic, and being a historian, a philosopher and something of a poet as well, he has written a fascinating book. SPECTATOR Robert Payne (1911-1983) was the author of many notable works, including The Rise and Fall of Stalin, The Life and Death of Lenin and The Life and Death of Adolf Hitler. Born in England, he was a constant world traveller, a keen observer, but always the biographer, historian, novelist, poet and translator.
