Excerpt: ... NOTES An event of great importance for parasitology was the opening last December of the Molteno Institute in Cambridge, England. The large and finely equipped building, made possible by the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Percy A. Molteno, was dedicated exclusively to the promotion of Research in Parasitology. No more appropriate location could have been selected, for Professor G. H. F. Xuttall, despite inadequate support and under many other trying conditions, has built up in Cambridge a laboratory and center for parasitological study that has contributed researches of great practical and theoretical value and has given him an international reputation. Through his advice British and Colonial governments have profited greatly, both in war and in peace. In his establishment and maintenance of the widely known periodical Parasitology, originally a supplement to the Journal of Hygiene, the literature of this science has been greatly enriched and research in this field wisely and powerfully stimulated. All will agree that Dr. Nuttall has richly earned and will effectively utilize these new facilities. It is not feasible here to describe in detail the character of the new building which has been carefully constructed with reference to its full adequacy for research. The Journal extends its congratulations to the University and to Dr. Nuttall on this splendid gift. The Steel Memorial Medal for 1921 has been awarded to Dr. Albert Hassall, by the Council of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons. This medal is given every three years for scientific or literary work of merit in connection with the veterinary profession. Dr. Hassall has been in the Bureau of Animal Industry for thirty-five years, and in addition to publications on parasitology, has built up an Index ...
